

Individualised Assessments for Every Child

Parents often reach out for help to know how to understand and respond to the challenges they face with their children.

When development doesn't seem to be going as expected, it is common to wonder, "Is my child neurodivergent?" In essence, a parent can feel desperate to know how to best help their child.

The Autism and ADHD assessments that we conduct at Lifespan have been carefully designed to try to help parents to think about what happens for their child and what happens in the family. Our assessments incorporate in-depth semi-structured interviews, evidence-based psychometric assessments and clinical observations that allow us to gain a thorough understanding of your child.

Whether or not your child meets the criteria for a diagnosis, we hope that this assessment will help you to understand your child more deeply. A child who feels they are understandable to others is more likely to meet developmental challenges with confidence.
